Getting started

Welcome — and thank you. You have just done something your family will thank you for at every holiday table from here on: you started saving the recipes.

Here is the whole idea. Somewhere in your family there is a card box, a tin, a drawer of recipe cards in handwriting nobody wants to lose — Grandma's dressing, your mother's rolls, the card with the coffee stain that means it was the good one. The Family Recipe Cookbook turns those cards into a printed-ready family cookbook: the original card on the left page, the recipe clean and readable on the right, gathered in sections by the family member who shared them.

This short guide walks you through your part. It is small on purpose: photograph, confirm, done. We handle the rest.

How it works

1. You invite your contributors. Each family member gets a private link — no accounts, no passwords. A sister across the country needs nothing but her phone.

2. Each person photographs their cards. One card per photo, front and back (recipes love to continue on the back). The next page has the whole photographing method — it takes a minute to learn and saves everybody a second round.

3. We transcribe every card into a clean, standardized recipe: ingredients in order, steps numbered, servings and temperatures where the card gives them.

4. The person who submitted each card checks the transcription against their photo and confirms it. Only then does a recipe enter your book. Nobody else can confirm it for them — that is what makes the whole family trust the text.

5. Your finished book arrives as a print-ready PDF, and bound printed copies can be ordered on top of it (page 6).
